WOMAN'S WORLD.

MISS WINDSCHIED'S TRIUMPH AT THE UNIVERSITY OF HEIDELBERG.

A Single Rose in Her Hair—Not a Woman's Voice Was Heard—A Roman Catholic View—Mrs. Stanton-Blatch—London Women Writers' Club.

The triumph of Miss Kate Windschied in being graduated from the old University of Heidelberg with the title of doctor of philosophy is a triumph for all German women. She is the first woman to win this distinction in Germany, and she won it from the proudest and oldest university of the fatherland, and against prejudice and traditions which heretofore had been insurmountable.

The theory—or fact rather—of the intellectual equality of men and women has never been admitted by Germans in general, although they have read proofs of it in their copies of Plato and the pages of thousands of other writers. They kept not only the professional schools at the universities closed to women, but the gymnasias, or colleges, and forced the clever ones to quench their thirst for knowledge in the so-called "seminaries" whose curriculum was made up chiefly of history, literature and modern languages. But German women who traveled in foreign lands and read of the privileges of women in this country and England, especially in the educational line, began to grow impatient under the restrictions to which they were subject.

One of the first advances made in Germany was the establishment at Berlin of the Victoria lyceum under the protectorate of the ex-empress Frederick, always one of the leaders in the movement for the higher education of German women.

Then came last year the founding of the gymnasium at Carlsruhe and Weimar, with the same courses of study as in the institutions attended by young men. Others are to be founded in various cities, including one almost under the very walls of the ancient Heidelberg institution, from which so many men have dilated upon "the intellectual inferiority of women." But with the action of the university regarding Miss Windschied all prejudice seems to have been overcome, and by the time that the first diploma is granted by the women's gymnasium the doors of every university in Germany will probably be open to their graduates.

Miss Windschied was born on Aug. 28, 1859, in Munich, the daughter of the late Professor Windschied, one of the most famous teachers of law on the continent. She was educated at schools in Munich, Heidelberg, Leipzig and Berlin, attending the Victoria lyceum in the latter city. Her course there was supplemented by studies in England, where she worked much in the British museum. In 1890, having been a teacher in the meantime, she began the study of philosophy at the university and was graduated a few weeks ago. The subject of her thesis was, "The English Pastoral Poetry From 1579 to 1635."

Miss Windschied has an interesting face, kindness being expressed in almost every feature. Her type is purely German.—New York Tribune.

A Single Rose in Her Hair.

The latest style of coiffure which finds favor in Paris is long and narrow. The hair may be arranged in a coil or a knot, as fancy dictates, taking care to adjust it at a becoming point on the head, but it must be elongated by an extra twist or two little curls at the back, which may be added for evening dress. The present mode of waving the hair all over the head still holds its popularity, but the front parting, which has been such a struggle to obtain, is to disappear entirely. The front hair is pressed lightly back, pulled down in careless waves on the forehead and arranged loosely at the side so it will droop slightly over the ears in a seemingly disorderly way, which is perfectly tidy and very becoming to some faces.

Every woman who wishes to look her very best must study the outline of her face and shape of her head in order to arrange her hair becomingly and skillfully modify the prevailing style to display her good points and soften the defective ones.

There is an evident inclination to revive the old time fashion of elaborate headdresses, and feathers, flowers, humming birds and filigree gold and silver ornaments are worn. Several ostrich feathers are arranged well back on the head to droop a little at each side, with an Alsatian effect, and have a high standing aigret in the center. Butterflies are the most popular designs just at the moment. The wings are of filigree gold, and the bodies are enameled or jeweled with colored stones, and three of these dainty winged things form one ornament. One is a gauzy jetted affair, and the wings rise from the jetted body of a bird. Artificial flowers combined with ostrich feathers form another fashionable headpiece.—New York Sun.

Not a Woman's Voice Was Heard.

There were some curious contrasts at the dedication last month of the monument to the memory of Mary, the mother of Washington. Ten thousand people gathered. The president of the United States came. So did the governor of Virginia, and civil and military dignitaries without number, and the Masonic fraternity, and a band of "representative ladies." The beautiful monument, for which the loving hands of women had raised the money—the first monument ever erected by women to a woman—was duly dedicated to the memory of a good mother. George Washington's words were quoted, "All that I am I owe to my mother," and also the words of a distinguished foreigner, "If such are the matrons of America, she may well boast of illustrious sons." There were floods of eloquence in praise of Mary Washington, and of the ladies of the Mary Washington association, and of

GOOD ALL-PURPOSE GOWNS.

American womanhood in general. All this was well. But not a woman's voice was heard. Not a woman present had the legal rights which are the unchallenged possession of the most ignorant man. Worse still, fine and true things about the sacredness of womanhood and the importance or moral purity were uttered, in some cases, by men whose lives made such words on their lips a mockery, and the praises of the illustrious dead were celebrated by "a generous sipping of wineglasses." However, there is a day after today, and the sun that shone upon that shaft of white marble will yet look upon "the good time coming."—Boston Woman's Journal.

Roman Catholic View of Woman Suffrage.

The closest study of the woman of the times fails to show her "really and truly" different from the woman of a generation back, who, it appeared from the testimony of our mothers, was much the same as their mothers found her. Liking the same things in a different dress, happy with the same hopes less diffidently expressed, wounded to the death by the same arrows of falsehood and neglect, hardening from the same causes into the same bitter, relentless, self-willed, "strong minded female," neither the "higher education," a business career, nor "the fashion" can change a woman's nature.

It is not to the ballot we must look for the best we shall yet see of woman. It is to the perfect home, the God-fearing, law-abiding, strengthening, cherishing, self-repressing home, whence the husband shall go forth to protect, to enlarge, to advance every interest of his family here and hereafter, secure in the faithful help and sympathy of his sheltered yet untrammelled wife; where that wife shall find enough and more than enough to fill her happy days in making beautiful and pure the smallest and weakest of her trusts. As wife, as mother, as friend, as helper in her own immediate circle, there is enough and to spare for every woman. It is the consciousness of such duties neglected; it is the scorpion lash of unsatisfied regrets for opportunities cast away, lost in view, and selfish aims for the things beyond her limits and her possibilities which marks the active woman suffragist. Truly the constitutional convention has an important question before it. And may heaven help the antisuffragists for the sake of all women, whether they will or no!—Catholic Standard.

Mrs. Stanton-Blatch.

Mrs. Stanton-Blatch has just made a flying visit to this country. She came to take a second degree at Vassar college, where she graduated 12 years ago. After reading her thesis and delivering an address to the class in economics the degree of M. A. was conferred on her. Mrs. Blatch spoke nearly every day while in New York on the pending amendment and the duty of the constitutional convention to enfranchise the women of the state. She has oratorical power of a high order and spoke at the mass meeting in Cooper institute with great effect. Her voice thrilled every heart. Before taking her seat she paused a moment at her mother's chair and imprinted a fervent kiss on her cheek, while Mrs. Stanton's heart was overflowing with pride and gratitude that younger orators were coming forward to plead the cause of woman's enfranchisement. "The general awakening among American women and their great enthusiasm just now for their speedy enfranchisement," she says, "will be a fresh stimulus to the movement in England, and I shall tell them, with great satisfaction, all I have seen and heard on this side the ocean."—New York Letter.

London Women Writers' Club.

Two and a half years ago the women journalists of London, failing to obtain entrance into the orthodox men's clubs, formed a club of their own on a modest scale. The venture prospered despite male ridicule, and recently the seal of success was set upon the Women Writers' club, as it is called, by Princess Christian, one of the queen's daughters, who opened the new club premises off the Strand. Various pretty speeches were made by pretty women in pretty dresses, and much tea and thin bread and butter and cake were consumed. Some favored men who were present, among the number Thomas Hardy, novelist; George Alexander, actor, and Henry Arthur Jones, playwright, declare that the members of the Women Writers' club are a sensible, business-like lot of young and middle aged women who mostly have to earn their own living. But there is a fashionable leaven in the mass which gives it tone and insures success. One live duchess, for instance, is a member, and several other ladies of title joined the ranks some time ago, while Princess Christian is actually president.—London Correspondent.

Women and Social Economics.

To meet the wants of the modern women, the philanthropic and economic work, and to prepare her for the changes the exercise of the franchise will entail, the school of social economics has decided to open in October a class for women. It will be held on Mondays from 4 to 5:30 o'clock. The course will include about 25 lectures. They will be given by Professor Gunton, the founder of the school. Principles of sociology, general development of social institutions, industrial history, wage system, interest, profits, rents, differentiation of production, practical application of municipal administration, are the practical subjects which will be included in the course. A general knowledge of history will be the chief requisite for admission, but considerable reading will be expected, and toward the close of the term comparative work will be taken up. The nominal sum of $10 will cover the cost.—New York Correspondent.

Cradles Are No More.

Cradles have gone out of date for babies, whose little brains are injured, who are told, by the rocking motion. Whether this is so or not, certainly no one need long for the pretty swaying arks of earlier days who see the lovely beds provided for the infant of 1894. One is like a great basket mounted on cross legs of wicker work. At the head there is a sort of tripod which supports a canopy that does not come over the crib at all, but merely falls to the floor in tied back curtains much like those at a draped dressing table. The body of the little bed is entirely covered with three rows of broad lace sewed to a lining that is fitted over the wickerwork. There are bows of white ribbon at the lower corners.—America.

A Delicate Tragedy.

"Julia," said the young man in a low, impassioned tone, "I have long sought the opportunity to tell you how deeply—how sincerely!"
The expression of amazement upon her features checked his utterance. He looked down and hesitated.
"Proceed, sir," she said in a reassuring tone.
"Oh, Julia, surely your heart tells you what I would say. I love you, Julia! Will you be my—but, no! I read too well my answer in your face. Adieu, then, forever! But the time will yet come when you will bitterly regret!"
And he dashed wildly from the apartment.
"Harold! Harold! Come back. You have misunderstood," she called after him. But it was too late.
"Oh, what have I done?" she exclaimed in anguish. "Yes, yes, I see it all now! I have assumed the wrong Delaunay expressions. Instead of 'joy' succeeded by deliberation, 'as I intended, my features expressed 'astonishment and aversion.'"
—Puck.

In the Police Court.

They are trying a young girl for nothing, who, notwithstanding her youth, has already been condemned five or six times.
"You are young," said the judge; "you might work. Who leads you in this terrible path of vice which has already caused you to be condemned so many times? Bad companions without doubt?"
"Bad companions!" replied the young respondent. "Perhaps. I have passed most of my life with magistrates."—Boston Courier.

Sight and Hearing.

"There's nothing more pleasing than a carefully moved lawn," said the landscape gardener.
"Well, it depends."
"On what?"
"On whether you are looking at it or listening to it."—Washington Star.
